CHAS. FREDRICKSON.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" never grows old. There runs through it a vein of pathos peculiarly touching and sweet. It speaks the universal language of the heart. It reflects like a prism the innermost phases of the human emotion. It is more than a play. It is a moral classic. It argues for two of the greatest themes that can enthuse the mind: human liberty and immortality of the soul. Notwithstanding its frequent production, it is seldom that one sees the play as now presented by J. D. Chunn's colossal spectacular company. It is like meeting an old friend after many years. The management doubtless believes in the maxim, "What's worth doing is worth doing well." They have brought together in this production all the requisites that go to make up a first class entertainment. J. D. Chunn's Greater Uncle Tom's Cabin Co. will exhibit at Rhinelander Monday June 22.

SLEEP WITH DYNAMITE

Three Men have Narrow Escape From Death in an Explosion Near Manson.

Three men, George McGregor and the two Erickson brothers, who reside near Tomahawk, experienced a narrow escape from death in a dynamite explosion.

The men were employed on a new town road and were camped about four miles south of Manson in Lincoln county. In the tent which they occupied, was stored twenty-five pounds of dynamite together with fuses. One evening the men made a smudge in the tent for the purpose of driving away mosquitoes. They went to sleep, leaving the smudge smoldering. During the night the smudge developed into flames and spread through the tent. Reaching the dynamite, the fuses became ignited and resulted in a terrific explosion, the report of which could be heard for several miles. The sleeping occupants of the tent, together with their outfit, were hurled through the air at express train speed. Each of the men was badly injured. Recovering from the shock of the explosion, they groped their way with great difficulty through the woods until they arrived at a farmer's house. Here their injuries were attended to and they were fitted with new clothing. That the men were not killed seems almost a miracle.

J. J. Remo of this city visited the scene a few days after the accident and says that the explosives rent a hole in the ground about ten feet in circumference and three feet in depth. Through the woods for a distance of one fourth of a mile could be seen bits of clothing, supplies and cooking utensils scattered by the explosion.

MRS. MCCORD WANTS PROPERTY.

The late Myron H. McCord never obtained a legal separation from his wife, Anna M. McCord, and the thousands of dollars worth of property which he sold to other persons and gave deeds for signed by himself alone, must be divided to allow Mrs. McCord her dower interest in the property. This is the contention of the attorneys for Mrs. McCord. The lawyers she has retained to fight the case are Messrs. Brown, Pradt, Genrich and Anderson of Wausau, and T. J. Matthews of Merrill. They have prepared notices to be served on all persons who have property which was deeded to them or their assignors by Mr. McCord, which did not bear his signature.

This property lies largely in the city of Merrill, but includes also more than a thousand acres of valuable timber lands, which will make her dower right a large sum.

CONTAINS LINCOLN'S DEATH.

C. Lynch, an old resident of this city, has in his possession a copy of the New York Herald of Saturday, April 15, 1865. The paper contains an account of the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln at Ford's Theatre, Washington, the evening previous. Mr. Lynch found the paper while searching through an old trunk which he had not opened in several years. Despite the age of the newspaper it is in an excellent state of preservation.

CASH SMITH LUCKY.

Report has it that Cash Smith, who several years ago was a prominent lumberman of this city, has accumulated a large fortune in the lumber business in Georgia. It is estimated that he is now worth about three hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Smith was not very successful while in Rhinelander, and later lost heavily in a sawmill venture at Munising, Mich. That good fortune has recently come his way is news which pleases his many old friends here.

MODERN WOODMEN PICNIC.

Large display bills advertising the big Modern Woodmen picnic in Rhinelander, July 3rd and 4th, are posted conspicuously about the city. This will be the biggest thing Rhinelander has ever had in the way of a celebration or picnic, and it is estimated that at least two thousand strangers will be here on that day. Every Modern Woodmen Camp in the Northeastern district will send delegations here.

DAMAGE BY FROST.

A heavy frost struck this part of the state last Sunday night and did much damage to crops. It is said that the potato crop was partly ruined while all smaller vegetation met a similar fate. Farmers throughout the county suffered great losses.

TEAMSTERS FINED.

Officers of the Humane Society of this city caused the arrest, Tuesday, of two teamsters charged with cruelty to their horses. The men were arraigned in Municipal Court and received fines amounting to twenty dollars in the aggregate.

FORMER RESIDENT WRITES

Letter Received of John W. Burns.
Tells of Life in Canadian Northwest.

THE NEW NORTH.

Dear Sir: I enclose you the $2 to pay for one year more of The New North which I receive every Friday. I am pleased to get the paper. I am well pleased with my new location and I am getting along splendidly with my work. This is a beautiful little city of about 30,000 or 35,000 people; there are several large saw mills in the city and a number on the river near here; the city is located near the Gulf of Georgia on the Fraser River and navigation for ocean vessels stops about 100 miles above here. We have several large salmon canning factories here also a number of fruit canneries, as well as lots of other industries. Our city car lines run to Vancouver, a carevery 15 minutes; we have three railroad lines besides a car ferry line to Victoria.

Business is much better here than in Washington; lumber is almost double the price. We have mostly Asiatic common labor, Hindoos, Japs and Chinese, they get from $1.25 to $3.50 per day. I get along very well.

I like the climate better than Washington, as we do not have half the rain or fog they do in Washington. The winter is very mild, in fact there is not much difference between winter and summer. Most all the business men are Americans; the rich English people who live here are not engaged in business. Well I must stop writing and get to work. Best regards to all.

Yours truly,
JOHN W. BURNS.

ALEX KREMBIS TO WED.

Invitations have been received by friends in Rhinelander announcing the coming marriage of Alexander George Krembs Jr. and Miss Grace Corcoran of Stevens Point. Mr. Krembs was formerly employed as prescription clerk at J. J. Reardon's drug store. He is now proprietor of a large drug store at Stevens Point. His bride to be is a popular young society lady of that city. The ceremony will take place next Tuesday morning at St. Stephen's church, Stevens Point.

GREELY SAWMILL BURNED.

The Greely sawmill at McCord has been destroyed by fire. The loss on the mill is placed at $1500 with no insurance. About $200 worth of lumber was also destroyed. The fire was probably the work of incendiaries. Some time has elapsed since the mill was operated. The site and ruins of the plant have been sold at a receiver's sale to Emerson Brothers of Prentice. The total amount realized was $4000. Of this sum Mr. Greely's creditors will likely receive about fifty cents on the dollar.

COURT REPORTER FOR JUDGE.

Judge Goodland, of the Tenth Judicial Circuit, is about to retire from the bench, and his court reporter E. S. Bradford has announced that he will be a candidate for the position.

Mr. Bradford was admitted to the bar as an attorney in 1887. For twenty-four years he has been a court reporter. He is widely acquainted throughout the circuit and has many friends both among the attorneys and the public. As he has had long experience in court work he is thoroughly fitted for the judgeship. At this time no other candidates are out for the place.

WANT NEW ROAD

Farmers in Western Part of County Anxious to Come to Rhinelander. Now Highway Necessary.

Ludwig Berg, a well to do farmer residing in the western part of the county, called at this office yesterday.

Mr. Berg says that the settlers in his section are desirous of securing the building of a new county road from their settlement to this city. At present they do all their trading in Tomahawk, but are anxious to bring this business to Rhinelander. The distances between the two points are equal, and as this city is much larger, and has many advantages in a commercial way over Tomahawk, it would be to their interest to make this city their market place.

At the present time it is impossible for farmers in the western part of the county to reach this city by team. There are many people who have owned farms there for years who have never yet been to Rhinelander. They have only a slight idea of the size and business activity of the city.

The new road proposition has been agitated for some time and the matter has now arrived at a point where the farmers believe that their demand should be given attention.

The cost of the construction of this highway would be a minor item when the advantages to be derived from the same are taken into consideration. It would bring indirect commercial contact with this city, a rich farming territory now practically unknown here. It would mean that thousands of dollars which are now being spent annually elsewhere would be distributed among the business people of Rhinelander.

SALOON LICENSES.

The granting of saloon licenses in Rhinelander this year will be governed by the following two sections of state laws:

Sec. 15651, Chap. 188, laws of 1907—From and after the first Monday of July, 1908, no license to sell, deal or traffic in malt, ardent, spirituous or intoxicating liquors shall be granted or issued to any person not a full citizen of the United States and of this state, and a resident of the town, village or city in which such license is applied for, nor shall any such license be granted or issued to any person who has been convicted of an offense against the laws of this state punishable by imprisonment in the state prison.

Sec. 4, Chap. 632, laws of 1907—All town and village boards and common councils or the duly authorized committees of such councils shall meet and be in session on the third Monday of each June and from day to day thereafter so long as it may be necessary for the purpose of acting upon such applications as may be presented to them conformably to this chapter. The population of any city or village shall be ascertained by the last preceding enumeration by the state or general government.

The last session refers to the minimum license fee. Thus it will be seen that saloon men were compelled to have their applications in by last Monday, two weeks earlier than they ever did before. They must also prove their citizenship and other qualifications or go out of business. If the council enforces the provisions of the law. No more saloon licenses can be granted in Rhinelander than there are at present, for there are more now than are allowed by the law passed at the last session of the legislature, except that they were in the business when the law was passed.

CAPTURES YOUNG EAGLE.

John Remo, manager of the Blue Grass Land Company's local office, has in captivity a young bald headed eagle which he captured near Tomahawk Lake. Mr. Remo and B. L. Horr were cruising through that section when they came to a big pine tree that had long since been killed by a forest fire. On the top-most branches of the tree was a large nest, at least six feet in circumference, containing the eagle. Mr. Remo concluded to secure the bird and began to climb the tree. When almost within reach of the nest the huge parent eagle hove in sight and no doubt would have attacked him had it not been for Mr. Horr, on the ground below, who succeeded in scaring them away. He reached the nest however, un molested and easily removed the young bird. Although the eagle is only a few months old, yet it is as large as a turkey and has an enormous appetite. It eats a whole rabbit or chicken at a meal. Mr. Remo will endeavor to keep the bird until it has attained its growth when he will present it to some Eagle lodge. Eagles of the bald headed variety are rare in this part of the country and it is said that few have ever been captured. Mr. Horr could easily have shot the parent birds had he desired to do so.

NAPIER GETS ONE YEAR.

Chas. Napier plead guilty to man slaughter in the fourth degree before Judge Goodland at Crandon, and was sentenced to one year in the state reformatory at Green Bay. Napier killed Walter Appleby, two months ago, near Armstrong Creek. The two men were engaged at road work when they entered into an altercation over some trivial matter. To defend himself from an attack by Appleby, Napier grabbed an ax and hit the man on the head. The blade sunk deep into Appleby's skull, but he lived for several hours after receiving the injury. Napier gave as his motive self-defense.

BASE BALL.

The game at the fair grounds, Sunday was not a good illustration of first class ball. The hired players showed lack of form for want of practice in fact, all the team showed need of more practice. If the home team does not play better ball at Ashland next Sunday, they will be defeated. However, there are some good practices this week and we hope for a victory with the Ashland team.

Result of last Sunday's game, Rhinelander 6 Wausau 3.

Villages Which Are of Interest Here.

FRAUD CHARGED IN ELECTION.

Popcorn Man Arrested on Charge of Illegal Voting in Beloit.

Beloit.—Several men in Beloit have been through the sweat box regarding the alleged election irregularities which are said to have prevailed on April 7, and which were investigated
by District Attorney John L. Fisher.
One arrest was made and Beloit people expected more sensations. James Sherman, who has conducted a popcorn stand, was arrested for illegal voting. Sherman said that he did not know that he could not vote here and that he had talked with a Beloit nation council member who told him it would be all right for him to vote. The commissioner authorized the investigation several weeks ago. The special committee was composed of Aldermen Janvier, Ingersoll, Dowd, Warner and Hanson. They have placed all of the material in the hands of the district attorney. Illegal registration, illegal voting, colonization of
voters, improper conduct at the polls,
excessive authority of election officers, buying of votes and intimidation of voters will be some of the charges that are likely to be given an airing.

BURIED UNDER AUTO.

Eight Have Narrow Escape When Rear Tire of Machine Explodes.

Racine.—Eight Racine people miraculously escaped death ten miles north of Frankville by a 45-60 horsepower automobile of John King's exploding
a tire and turning turtle. The machine left this city for Milwaukee with King driving and in it were Mrs.
Lucius J. Elliott and her two daughters; a daughter of former State Senator O. W. Johnson and two women friends, one from Winthrop, the other from Detroit, and Karl Wegner. When running at the rate of eight miles an hour a rear tire exploded and the machine went over like a flash, burying the eight people, except Mr. Wegner, who was thrown into a ditch. When the occupants were pulled from under it was found that all had escaped with slight scratches and bruises. The disabled automobile was brought back to town and the passengers conveyed to the city in another automobile.

TORNADO KILLS TWO.

Father and Son Perish when Farmhouse and Barn is Demolished.

Mauston.—A tornado struck the farm of John Dalton, a well-to-do farmer living four miles south of Mauston, demolishing his fine farmhouse and barn, and killing Mr. Dalton and his 12-year-old son, Philip.
Other occupants of the house received only slight injuries. No other damage was done by the tornado. Observers say that a funnel-shaped cloud which was traveling at a great height suddenly dropped and after sweeping to Dalton's farm rose again and disappeared. The bodies of Dalton and his boy were found beside the road some distance from the house.

RAN INTO A STREET CAR.

Bicycle Rider Meets Instant Death in Collision with a Car.

Wausau.—Charles Hintze, 18 years of age, employed in a lumber yard
here and son of Henry Hintze, living eight miles west of here, was instantly killed in a collision with a street car while riding into town on a bicycle from an auction sale held in the country. His wheel became entangled in the car fender and the fall to the pavement is believed to have killed him instantly. The deceased was riding down hill as he approached the car truck and was unable to stop his wheel in time to avoid an accident.
A companion who was with him
passed over the track before the car and rode on, his name not being learned.

year's encampment. A. F. Olman of Ellsworth was chosen president.

Not to Speak to Family.

Kenosha.—Chris Rasmussen, a Pleasant Prairie farmer, has become tence to state prison on a charge of having seduced his wife and children, Rasmussen signed an agreement that he shall never see them again and should he happen to meet them accidentally he will make no effort to speak to them.

Connecting Link Ready.

pany operating an interurban between Neshanic and Kaukauna, and the Winnebago Traction company operating between Oshkosh and Neshanic. The rails will be laid soon.

Another Guinness Victim.

Eau Claire.—Christen Hiltzen, who formerly resided in Dover, four miles south of Chetek, and who mysteriously disappeared from there in 1906 after selling his farm for $2,000 in cash, is believed to have been a victim of Mrs.
Guinness of Laporte.

Fall from Train Kills.

Glenfield.—William Eekes of Lad-

REPUBLICAN BODY ENDS SEAT STRIFE

MORE TAFT DELEGATIONS ARE SEATED BY THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

ANTI-MACHINE CLIQUE WINS FIRST CONTEST

Plans for Making Nomination of Cabinet Official Unanimous Are Set on Foot by His Friends—"Allies" Hold Meeting and Keep Up Fight.

Chicago, June 13.—The Republican national committee Friday finished the hearings of contests.

The contests called up were several districts in Texas, those from Virginia, Oklahoma and from Arizona and Alaska. The national committee decided in favor of the Lyon delegates
in all of the seven Texas districts considered Friday. This gives the Taft people a clean sweep of the state on the temporary roll call. The arguments for the anti-Taft people in the First, Eighth, Tenth and Eleventh districts were made by Thomas Bailey.
In the Second, Fifth and Twelfth districts the anti-Taft people were represented by A. J. Macaulay. National Committee Chairman C. A. Lyon represented the Taft delegates in all the contests. The state of Virginia was called immediately following the decision in Texas. The contests here were for delegates-at-large and in the First and Eighth districts, inclusive.
The at-large contest was first taken up.
Discuss Voting Qualifications.

It was asserted that only about 9,000 negroes were entitled to vote under the laws of Virginia, and that of these,
only between 3,000 and 4,000 have properly qualified. Maj. F. C. Bryan

(Manager of Taft Boom Who Has Brought It to Victory.)

of Ohio made the argument for the anti-Taft delegates. He said before entering the committee room that he did not regard the case of his clients, who favor Senator Foraker for the presidency, as being "particularly strong." Maj. Bryan on his appearance before the national committee in the Virginia cases announced that he would withdraw the contest against the Taft delegates-at-large, there being no evidence, and none of the protesting delegates having put in an appearance. The First, Second, Third, Fourth, Sixth and Eighth district contests were then consolidated, 20 minutes being given to each side for argument. Mr. Groner opened for the Taft delegates.

Anti-Taft Men Seated.

At the expiration of the arguments in the consolidated Virginia case, the committee decided in favor of the Taft delegates, seating those from the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Sixth and Eighth districts. The contest in the Fifth Virginia district resulted in the seating of an anti-Taft delegation, the first in abundance. Compromises had been reached in two other cases, but the result in this district was a direct defeat for Taft. The Fifth Virginia district includes Danville, and when the call was issued for the convention at that place it read: "For white Republicans."
On this one point, the Taft delegation was overthrown. The motion to seat the Wilson-Russell delegates, who are for Senator Foraker,
was carried by a vote of 19 to 16.

Accepts a Detroit Call.

Madison.—Rev. Frederick T. Galpin, pastor of the First Baptist church of Madison during the last four years,
resigned to accept a call to the First Baptist church of Detroit. The resignation is to take effect on September
1. Rev. Mr. Galpin receives a salary of $2,000 a year here and will, it is understood, receive a substantial increase at Detroit.

Bites Tongue in Two.

Sheboygan.—Louis Reichert, a young man, bit his tongue in half as the result of being thrown from a bicycle when the fork of the wheel broke. He also broke his nose and sustained severe bruises.

Improve Coal Docks.

Superior.—The Lehigh Valley coal company is improving its coal docks
by putting in a concrete foundation.
A fire fighting equipment will be installed.

Druggist Ends His Life.

Black River Falls.—Ben C. Werner, 47 years of age, one of the best-known druggists in western Wisconsin, committed suicide by shooting himself through the temple. He was despondent over poor health. Mr. Werner was unmarried.

Father Zimmer to Give Up Charge.

Dover Dam.—Owing to failure in health, Father Zimmer, pastor of St.
Peter's Catholic congregation in this city since December, 1893, will relinquish his charge.

Use Good Salt.

Never use coarse salt in salting butter intended for market. It will be impossible to properly distribute the salt through the butter and if the distribution is not perfect the butter can never command anything like a respectable price on the market. Most dairy experts advise salting the butter in the churn when it is in the granular form; however, excellent results are obtained by salting when the working is being done.

Much of the Fruit Shipped to Market is Picked when too immature.

Items of Importance to Wisconsin
People, Gleaned at Madison.

Madison.—The supreme court holds that the tenement house law, against which objection was made in Milwaukee, the city's building inspector opposing the law, is unconstitutional.
The decision was rendered in the case of John Bonnett, a contractor, against Joseph E. Vallier, as state factory inspector, and others. Mr. Vallier having attempted to enforce the provisions of the law in connection with an apartment house which Mr. Bonnett was erecting upon Thirtieth street in Milwaukee. The court decided that Mr. Bonnett had the right to bring the action and that the legislature exceeded its authority in imposing the restrictions contained in this statute, which was intended to prevent tenement houses from being built too close together and to insure plenty of air and good sanitary conditions. The court holds that the provisions of the law are so far reaching as to be unreasonable. Among the points the court establishes are these:
"The regulation and maintenance of tenement, lodging and boarding houses
is a proper subject for legislative regulation, but the degree of regulation permissible varies greatly according to circumstances. There is a wide interval between the ideal and the practical, the latter standard should prevail as to legislative regulations as to the construction and maintenance of tenement, lodging and boarding houses. Common sense should prevail, not the extreme views of well-meaning persons, as to what is for the best."

Three new candidates are in the field for county offices. W. W. Carr for reelection as County Clerk, W. J.
LaSalle for Treasurer and Axel Lindegren for Register of Deeds.

In the National Committee last week, the Taft steam roller swept over the anti Taft delegates and the contests were practically all decided for Taft. Taft is a sure winner by an overwhelming majority.

The inmates of the Minnesota penitentiary at Stillwater publish a newspaper known as the Mirror. Think of the advantages the editor of a prison paper has over his brothers on the outside. He can then voice his true opinion on all subjects without fear of being attacked by some irate subscriber with a shot gun.

Ex-Mayor Sherbie Becker of Milwaukee says that he has withdrawn from the race for Governor. This is perhaps news to the majority of people who didn't even know that he was running. Sherbie will now no doubt attempt a dash to the North Pole in that balloon he intended to use for campaign purposes.

Members of the Appleton Merchant's Association have adopted a novel method to rid themselves of "dead debts," and one which they truly believe will clean up their books and keep them clean. It is their plan to take all bad accounts,
advertise the list in the newspapers
for ten days and then auction them off to the highest bidder. The "dead debts" will feel so ashamed when he sees his name in print that he will hasten to pay the debt and in the future will run no more accounts.

The great Republican National Convention is now in session at Chicago. Roosevelt's power clearly dominates the sentiment. He is the great power behind the throne.
More enthusiasm is displayed for him
than any other man. With Roosevelt in the saddle the platform will probably be clear cut on the anti-injunction plank and other important issues. That is right, give us frankness, the sentiment of the American people demands it.

The vice-presidency seems to be an uncertain quantity. The sentiment sways first in one direction and then another. LaFollette clearly controls the Wisconsin delegation, his law partner A. T. Rogers is chosen National Committeeman—in place of Joseph Hancock—and Congressman
Cooper is on the platform committee.
There will be a strong effort to have some of LaFollette's ideas drafted into the platform.

As a rule editors are the first to hear of gossip, indiscretions of men and women, hundreds of things totally unfit for publication; intrigues and clandestine dates, meetings, night
buggy rides, young girls gone astray.
The newspaper man usually finds out their naughty ways before they are secretly they have been planned and kept. If the papers would publish one-half the stuff they hear, there would be ten divorce suits to one
now. There would be social ostracism of many who shine in upperdom.
There would be shotgun marriages,
imprisonment, dissolution and misery.
The editor learns nearly all of the hypoecrisy of life and it is a wonder that he believes in heaven or hell. Many people are continually finding fault with the newspaper, when as a matter of fact, they owe their very standing to the editorial waste basket.

ARRESTED FOR ASSAULT

Newbold Residents Have Trouble.
Row Starts Over Wood.
Two Men Injured.

Frank Poleski has issued a warrant for the arrest of Antonio Kilmas
and his son Antonio Jr. of Newbold for assaulting him in a saloon at Newbold, Monday.
Poleski was employed by Henry Wubker at the time. The men became engaged in a difficulty over some lumber piled by the highway used by Mr. Wubker and his crew for unloading heavy freight.
The two Kilmas men are accused of attacking Poleski and badly injuring him. Mr. Wubker was in the saloon at the time, but was unable to assist Poleski. He immediately drove to his home some distance away and securing his two sons, John and Henry and a workman named Andrew Freihman went back to the saloon for the purpose of removing the injured man.
The Wille driving along the road the party was confronted by Kilmas and his son whom it is claimed, commenced to resume hostilities. The elder Kilmas, who is a powerful man, grabbed an ax and would have struck Henry Wubker, Jr. had not the boy's brother, John, interfered. John hit the man with the butt end of a gun, knocking him from the wagon. Kilmas suffered a scalp wound.
The man caused the arrest of Henry Wubker Sr., claiming that it was he who struck the blow. Mr. Wubker denies his striking the man. He says that he was afraid to go to Poleski's aid without protection as the Kilmas-es had threatened him injury.
In that section there is no police protection. The Kilmases are accused of threatening many residents with bodily harm, and consequently Mr. Wubker did not feel safe to attempt to aid Poleski, alone and unarmed.

CIRCUS IS HERE.

This is circus day in Rhinelander.
The Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows are in the city. The circus arrived over the North-Western road from Wausau
this morning and a big crowd congregated at the railroad yards to witness the unloading. Everything about the Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows goes with clock-work rapidity and at this hour the big tents are erected on the Shepard grounds, and in readiness for the performances this afternoon and evening. The street parade this noon was an attractive affair and was witnessed by hundreds of people who thronged the side walks along the route.

The show was one of the cleanest
which ever came to Rhinelander.
There was absolutely no disorder today; nothing happened which would reflect in any way upon the management. There are no "circus followers" to be dreaded when the Hagenbeck-Wallace Show comes to town,
which is always on the alert for suspicious characters.

Adam F. Schleifmann, of Rhinelander, a former resident of the town of Sharon, this county, is a candidate for the Republican nomination for the office of treasurer of Oneida county, and as Adam is a first-class citizen in every respect, thoroughly competent, he would prove an excellent official. Immigration for Wisconsin.

The publisher is just in receipt of the first issue of a publication known as the Wisconsin Homeseeker, issued by the Chicago & Northwestern Ry., for the purpose of stimulating immigration to Wisconsin and furnishing information in regard to its natural resources.

A series of letters from settlers is published in the Homeseeker, in which these pioneers tell in an interesting way something of their experiences in establishing new homes and developing their land into profitable farms.

The North Western is desirous of securing as many more testimonials of this kind as possible. A letter from you would appeal strongly to the prospective homeseeker, and every homesteader is earnestly invited to write a letter telling of the crops, soil, climate, schools, the cost of getting a start, etc., for use in this manner, and send it to us together with the names and addresses of friends in the East who would be interested in having a copy of the "Homeseeker." Illustrated books, maps and other literature mailed to them free of charge.

Address all communications to the subject to Mr. W. B. Kniskern, P. T. M., C. & N. W. Ry., Chicago, Ill.

Fire Works and Fourth of July Goods

At THE RACKET STORE

Our popular June Sales are meeting with much appreciation from all classes of shoppers, and we have decided to continue them for another week or two, in response to the popular demand. We shall endeavor to make these sales even better from day to day and you may feel assured of very unusual bargain offerings every day. No old goods whatever are being offered--the strictly seasonable merchandise which we are selling so low is all of the newest and best, and represents our streak of luck in making some very fortunate purchases. We are sharing our good fortune with our trade.

Included in our special June Sales are embroideries, laces, handkerchiefs, dress gingham, percales, white goods, mulls, swisses, voiles, lawns, cottons, underwear, hosiery, shoes, tailored skirts, ladies' jackets, umbrellas, lace curtains and many other goods that are right in season and wanted at this time of the year.

DEATHS.

The death of Mrs. John Collins occurred at St. Mary's hospital at an early hour, last Friday morning.

Although for three days Mrs. Collins was known to be critically ill, the news that she had passed away came as a shock to the lady's friends throughout the city.

Six weeks ago Mrs. Collins was stricken with the illness which terminated in her death. For a number of days her condition was regarded as serious but she finally apparently recovered sufficiently to be pronounced passed the danger stage. The forepart of last week, however, she suffered a relapse. Dr. Dunsmore, a leading specialist from Minneapolis, was summoned on the case and he advised an operation at once. She was immediately removed to St. Mary's hospital and the operation performed. She passed through the ordeal safely and for a time it was thought that she would recover. Thursday afternoon she grew worse and Dr. Dunsmore was again telegraphed but he arrived too late to aid her. Death came shortly before four o'clock.

Mrs. Collins was one of the city's most prominent women socially, and as a church and club worker, and her death is felt by every one. She was a devout member, and earnest worker in the Catholic church. She was a member of the Rhinelander Woman's Club and for several years was secretary of the Library Board.

Mrs. Collins was born in Stevens Point and spent her girlhood days in that city. She was thirty-nine years of age. Beside her husband she is survived by one brother Chas. McCormick of Marquette, Mich.

The funeral was conducted Monday morning from St. Mary's church.

Alex White, a well known resident of the North Side died last Friday afternoon at St. Mary's hospital, Oshkosh.

Mr. White had been an invalid for several months and had been confined in the above hospital for two weeks. His wife was with him when he died. The remains arrived in this city Saturday morning, and the funeral was held Monday afternoon. Dr. Lienfelder of St. Mary's church conducted the services.

Deceased was a member of the K. O. T. M. lodge and carried $2000 insurance. A wife and three children survive him. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. John White of Everett, Mich., and several other relatives were here in attendance at the funeral.

Frank LaGage, who for many years has been a resident of the city, died Wednesday morning at his home on North Brown street. He had been in ill health for the last year and for most of the time had been confined to his bed. His death came as a relief from long suffering. Mr. LaGage, up to the time of his last illness, was an employee in the train service of the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company. He was a steady industrious worker, a good railroad man, and for years gave the Soo faithful service. His death is mourned by a host of friends in this city. Among his fellow trainmen he will be greatly missed.

He is survived by a family. Up to this hour arrangements for the funeral have not been made.

THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF MONSIEUR CLAUDE

Edited by George Tickell

BEING THE CHRONICLES OF A FAMOUS PREFECT OF POLICE DURING THE REGIME OF THE SECOND EMPIRE, IN THE REIGN OF NAPOLEON III, NOW PUBLISHED FOR THE FIRST TIME.

THE LIFELESS FORM OF M. LANDRE

CLAUDE, seated at a desk alone in his private sanctum, looked up in response to a soft knock on the door and bade the applicant enter. A petite woman of slender figure appeared, and throwing back a heavy veil that enshrouded her features greeted the redoubtable chief of police with a gracious smile.

The visitor was Mme. Jeanne Rigault, an acknowledged belle of the court of Napoleon III, high in favor with the emperor and a beauty whose capricious ways wrought devastation in the hearts of a legion of admirers. There were, however, a favored few, among whom was numbered M. Claude, aware that under the butterfly existence affected by this spoiled child of Fortune there lurked a talent for intrigue and a deeper purpose than appeared on the surface. The olive loveliness of her perfect face did not conceal the determined outlines of an obstinate little chin, and the languorous glances of her dark brown eyes often served to conceal the subtle light of penetration that shone behind their long silken lashes. For Mme. Rigault's sidi as a Chateaux was second to none in the realm, and there were few secrets of the prefecture unknown to the wonderfully resolute and radiantly beautiful coquette of the imperial court.

The chief rose and, having provided a chair for his visitor, smiled good humoredly in response to the ringing burst of laughter that issued from the red lips of the vivacious little lady.

"I accept your cheerfulness as a good omen, Mme. Rigault," said the chief, when the sounds of her merriment had died away into silence. "At all events I may infer that it portends success in my mission."

"Success?" repeated Mme. Rigault. "Well, yes, M. Claude, and a goodly one as far as we are concerned, but one of evil import for other people, among whom may be mentioned our cunning and sanguine compatriot, M. Landre."

"M. Landre?" exclaimed the chief. "Then our suspicions were correct?"

"Even so," rejoined his visitor. "That excellent citizen, not content with betraying emperor and country in the interests of Prussia, has plotted vigorously at home with the object of obtaining vengeance on certain Parisians who have incurred his enmity, the list of whom includes one M. Claude, head of the prefecture."

"I am well aware of the dislike entertained by M. Landre for your humble servant," he remarked. "Confident of his influence with the emperor he has repeatedly endeavored to bring about my dismissal. Fortunately, his imperial majesty, having no reason to doubt my fidelity, resisted the pressure brought to bear upon him in the matter."

"Louis Napoleon would indeed be ungrateful," responded Mme. Rigault, "were he to forget the services you have rendered the empire."

The chief smiled slightly at the compliment, but made no comment, and Mme. Rigault continued: "But a person of M. Landre's caliber is not to be easily dissuaded from the execution of any project he conceives. Other means having failed him he has arranged a plot whereby he hopes to silence forever your voice, that has told him unpalatable truths on more than one occasion."

"I expected as much," returned the chief; "and it will be strange if the final attempt to remove me from his path does not result in a complete check to his play. All I require is absolute proof of his connection with the band of assassins known as the 'Society of Avengers,' that has endeavored to establish a reign of terror in Paris during the past year."

"And that evidence," interrupted Mme. Rigault, "I have secured, thanks to my long attracted the amorous eye of M. Landre, whom you know is an ardent admirer of our sex. Last night she attended a masked ball given by Landre in his mansion at Autell to the creatures of the underworld with whom he is affiliated. He paid her the most flattering attentions and when the night was far advanced and he and his associates were well under the influence of wine, she managed to explore the upper portion of the house. In a desk in his library, opened by the aid of one of the skeleton keys you provided, she discovered a paper containing the minutes of the last meeting held by the society. Here it is. You will perceive that M. Claude is named as the next victim to be marked by the Scarlet Arrow."

She tossed a folded paper on the chief's desk, and M. Claude, spreading it out, perused the contents with eager eyes. At the conclusion of his examination he said: "This document establishes beyond a doubt the complicity of M. Landre in the series of mysterious murders, nine in all, that have taken place recently. In each case one of these tokens was attached to the victim's clothing."

Opening a drawer, he produced a miniature metal arrow painted a bright scarlet, with a pin attachment apparently intended for the purpose of allowing it to be worn as an ornament.

"In the first two instances," resumed the chief, "where this symbol made its appearance, I was disposed to look upon it as a mere coincidence. But when a third corpse was discovered, this time in the waters of the Seine, also bearing the scarlet arrow, I saw that the thing possessed a sinister significance. Since then six more murders have occurred, with the arrow as sole clue to the perpetrators. Within the last month my men have succeeded in tracing eight of these crimes to the so-called Society of Avengers, which numbers among its members over 50 of Europe's most desperate and daring criminals."

"Yet no arrests have been made," remarked Mme. Rigault. "That is so," returned the chief, "because I hold my hand, with the design of obtaining evidence against the master hand who organized the society and whose cunning enabled it to exist. To wound a serpent's body is not sufficient; one must crush the head in order to render the reptile harmless. It was for that reason I required your assistance in snaring M. Landre. The position he holds at court and the powerful political influence he exerts made it necessary to be cautious when dealing with him."

"What possible advantage can M. Landre hope to derive through his association with a band of depraved criminals?" inquired Mme. Rigault, curiously.

"The advantage of having dangerous instruments at his command," replied the chief. "The society's avowed object is to avenge the betrayal of any criminal to the law on those who have either unwittingly or by design, assisted in his capture. Each of the nine victims so far sacrificed was a man who had supplied information to the police that resulted in the apprehension and punishment of some malefactor. But M. Landre is clever enough to know that with such evil forces under his direction he could also employ them to serve his personal ends. The scarlet symbol was undoubtedly chosen for the purpose of impressing the public with the existence of a mysterious and deadly power in its midst which it would be fatal to offend. M. Landre looks forward to would materially assist the designs of Prussia upon this country. With unscrupulous rampart in the principal city of France, our government would be put to serious straits in the event of aggression by a foreign power."

"These proofs should be submitted to the emperor at once," exclaimed Mme. Rigault in agitated tones.

"Mme. Rigault," rejoined the chief placidly, "the fruit is not yet ripe for plucking. Something more is needed ere Louis Napoleon can be convinced that the man whom he has loaded with benefits is a traitor most foul. M. Landre, although possibly the most dangerous, is not the only Prussian spy in the Chateau, as you are well aware."

Mme. Rigault nodded dejectedly. "I have oftentimes marvelled," she said slowly, "that the emperor remains blind to the dangers that surround him."

"Not altogether blind, Mme. Rigault," dissented the chief. "There are certain things that for reasons of state his majesty does not wish to see. Therefore, as I said before, we must proceed cautiously. To-night, by virtue of the information you have furnished, I will visit a part of the city where some disreputable allies of M. Landre make their headquarters."

"Then I will bid you adieu for the present, M. Claude," said Mme. Rigault, rising. "With the copies of M. Landre's Prussian correspondence that I obtained safe in your hands, my task is finished."

"Accept my eternal gratitude, Mme. Rigault," returned the chief, with a polite bow, as the little lady smiled brightly and made her exit from the room.

In those days the quarter known as the "Cite" was the rendezvous of all the scum of Paris. Close to the walls of the Palais de Justice there existed a labyrinth of streets where criminals of all kinds lurked after midnight. It was in these gawdies regions where dark and winding alleys led to filthy-encrusted stairways that a mass of bandits, human vermin, swarmed. It was there that hideous crimes were planned and the perpetrators of the deeds sought refuge from the officers of the law.

The hour of midnight was close at hand when M. Claude, cunningly disguised, and assuming the reckless air of a half drunken loafer, entered the wine-shop of the Lapin Blanc, one of the most notorious lairs of the Cite, and situated in the center of the Rue aux Fous. The tavern consisted of a large low room furnished with eight broad tables secured by chains to the whitewashed walls. These tables were lined before a bar upon which stood a number of jugs and drinking vessels, bound with iron. At the back of the room a door opened upon a long alley which stretched as far as the eye could penetrate into the darkness.

The three tables nearest the entrance were occupied by several noisy ruffians engaged in playing cards and drinking from the pewter measures that stood before them. At the last table in the rear of the room, a young girl sat alone, with her head buried in her hands.

It was toward this solitary female that M. Claude's eye wandered instantly. Crossing the floor with swaggering strides, he seated himself beside her and placed his hand on her shoulder. She started and looked up, revealing a face that had once been beautiful, but whose features were now indelibly stamped with the coarse lines of dissipation, although the owner could scarcely have passed her seventeenth year.

"What do you want?" she queried in a hoarse, cracked voice, as she gazed sullenly at the disturber of her reverie.

"Don't be afraid," responded M. Claude, jovially. "Drink with me, my beauty, and forget your troubles. I'm not a bad sort, Nina Fleurette, as you'll find out when you've known me a while."

"I don't know you," returned the girl suspiciously. "Who are you and why do you come from?"

"All in good time," replied the chief. "Here comes the wet for our throats. Drink and then we can talk better."

He caught up the jug of brandy that had made its appearance in response to his signal to the tall, bony woman who presided at the bar, and passed it to his companion. She no longer hesitated, but raising the vessel took a deep draught of its fiery contents and set it down with a harsh laugh.

"That's the stuff that makes us all happy," she cried in discordant accents, as M. Claude grasped the jug and carried it to his mouth.

"I've something important to tell you, Nina Fleurette," said the chief, replacing the jug on the table. "Bond your head over till I whisper my news; we want no spies to hear us."

The girl leaned toward him and M. Claude muttered something in an understood. She started back and stared at him curiously.

"You say you come from 'M. Landre,'" she whispered hoarsely. "How do I know you are speaking the truth?"

"Look down and behold the sign," replied M. Claude in the same cautious tone.

The girl glanced rapidly at her companion's hand which was held under the edge of the table. In the open palm there gleamed the scarlet outlines of a small arrow.

"Very well, Monsieur," she said. "I see you are one of us. What is your message?"

"You are to come with me to a house in the Rue du Temple, where your lover, Emil Chateaux, awaits us," returned M. Claude. "There is work on hand and your help is needed. For the 'traps' are abroad and for aught we know may be watching us here."

Nina Fleurette made a gesture of assent, and M. Claude, with a quick glance around to assure himself that their movements were not observed, arose and passed swiftly through the rear door, the girl following at his heels. As they emerged on the street into which the alley opened, the chief led the way to a cab standing at the edge of the pavement and opening the door signed to his companion to enter. She did so and as soon as M. Claude had followed her the driver whipped up his horse and started off at a rapid pace.

On the afternoon of the second day after his visit to the Lapin Blanc, M. Claude entered a police station in the Rue de Jerusalem, and bowed formally in response to the salutation of the inspector in charge.

"Good day, M. Blauvert," said the chief. "Have you taken Emil Chateaux, according to my instructions?"

"Your orders were carried out promptly, M. Claude," replied the inspector. "Chateaux was decoyed by a message to a quiet spot where he was seized, forced into a cab, and brought here without the knowledge of any of his pals. We gathered him in only three hours ago, so that he is unlikely to be missed from his regular haunts until to-night."

"You have done well," commented the chief. "In what condition is the prisoner, Nina Fleurette, whom I delivered to you last Tuesday night?"

"She suffers terribly," returned Blauvert. "The supply of morphine she carried was taken away from her. As she is a habitual user of the drug she has raged and wept alternately, beseeching us to give her a few grains of the stuff, but acting under your instructions Dr. Martine not only refused but declined to administer any medicines that might alleviate her distress."

"Tell Dr. Martine I wish to see him," said the chief curtly.

In a few moments the police surgeon, a tall, well-built man of 60, with iron-gray hair and beard, made his appearance.

"I sent for you to make some inquiries as to the condition of Nina Fleurette, inmate of cell 15, M. Martine," said the chief.

"Ah, yes," responded the surgeon. "Number 15, a bad case, M. Claude. She is partly delirious and unless relief of some kind is given her death can only be a question of hours."

"How long can she live in her present state?" demanded the chief.

"The surgeon pursed his lips and meditated. 'I would like to visit her again before answering,' he said.

"Come then, Inspector Blauvert and I will accompany you," said the chief. They proceeded to the door which gave admission to the narrow stairway leading to the cells beneath, and as it swung open a faint moaning became audible.

"That is No. 15," remarked the surgeon. "An hour ago she was shrieking violently, but I presume she is almost exhausted now."

Reaching the cell in which the girl was confined they beheld a figure lying prostrate upon the stone floor and twitching convulsively. The girl of the Lapin Blanc presented a truly ghastly and terrifying appearance. Her eyes, bloodshot and hollow, with pupils contracted until they had become mere pin points, glared horribly from out the sunken, pallid face; her tangled black hair hung in unkempt masses over her slender shoulders, and shreds of cloth torn from her garments lay scattered around.

At the sound of the officials' footsteps she turned and struggled to her knees, holding out imploring hands, the palms of which were lacerated and bleeding from the furious attacks of her nails on the agonized flesh.

"Mercy, Mercies," she moaned despairingly, "mercy for the love of the Bon Dieu—only a little—just a little morphine. Holy Mother—what pain—what torture! The fiends are running red-hot knives through my body—give me help or death—death; do not let me live thus—"

Her voice died away into a hoarse gurgle, and falling back into her former position she sobbed and chattered incoherently. M. Claude looked upon the sufferer with an impassive countenance.

"How long may she exist—so, M. Martine?" he demanded of the physician.

The latter bent over the girl, felt her pulse and peered curiously into the shrunken pupils of her eyes.

"She might linger on for ten hours, but no longer, in her present exhausted condition," he declared with professional coolness.

"That is long enough to serve my purpose," returned the chief. "M.

Blauvert, bring hither Emil Chateaux."

The inspector made a sign to one of his subordinates, and two stalwart guards appeared in charge of an athletic young man, whose wrists were heavily ironed. At sight of the wretched figure lying in cell 15 the newcomer uttered a terrible cry of anguish, and M. Claude, pointing to the girl, said with deliberate earnestness:

"Your liberty and the life of Nina Fleurette depends upon you, Chateaux. She is already suffering horrible agony and will die miserably within the next ten hours unless you intervene to save her."

"What do you require of me?" asked the prisoner feverishly.

"Simply this," replied the chief grimly. "You were selected to lure me to a certain spot to-night and slay me. It is unnecessary to enumerate the details of the scheme, as you are thoroughly familiar with them. Now, in a few hours you will be set at liberty and I intend you to visit M. Landre, president of the Society of Avengers, for the purpose of informing him that you have executed your commission and thrown my body into the Seine. You will present my signed ring to him as a token of success, return here and report to me."

At the mention of M. Landre's name the prisoner turned pale. Then he spoke in defiant accents.

"I refuse!" he said sullenly. M. Claude shrugged his shoulders.

"A foolish choice," he said coolly. "By complying with my request you would have won freedom for you, wretched creature and yourself, with the stipulation that you must both leave Paris. As it is I repeat that she will linger on in hellish torment for ten hours without medical aid and perish horribly. And for you—there remains the gallies or scaffold as a reward for some of the crimes you have committed."

"I'll do it," Chateaux said savagely. "For her sake, not for my own, curse you!"

M. Claude smiled indifferently, as one might upon an angry child.

"It is agreed then, my friend," he said anxiously; "but beware if you play me false! A failure to execute my orders in the smallest degree means death for Nina Fleurette and a heavy reckoning for you to pay in the near future. And please to remember that I possess an exceedingly long arm that will reach out and secure you sooner or later, should you be tempted to err in following my instructions."

Before leaving the station the chief held a short conference with M. Martine and the inspector.

"You will release Chateaux at ten o'clock, M. Blauvert," said his superior. "He will return in an hour or so and you will detain him until you receive further orders from me. How is your patient, now, M. Martine?"

"Resting quietly," replied the surgeon. "I administered a dose of morphine sufficiently large to satisfy her craving and she will receive a similar quantity at stated periods, while under my care."

On the day following all Paris was thrown into commotion by the announcement in the newspapers that M. Claude, head of the prefecture, had disappeared, and that the finding of his coat on the banks of the Seine gave grounds for suspicion that the famous chief of police had met with foul play. A miniature metal arrow, scarlet in color and pinned to the garment, recalled the fact of a similar token having figured in several mysterious murders during the past year, and left small room for doubt that M. Claude was the victim of a secret band of assassins. Meanwhile, the missing man, preserving his identity in a cleverly designed disguise, strolled leisurely about the boulevards listening to the many conjectures of interested citizens as to his probable fate. Shortly after midnight he was closeted with Napoleon III. in the latter's private cabinet, narrating to the astonished emperor the details of his investigation into the operations of M. Landre.

"You have managed your part with rare skill and diplomacy, M. Claude," said the emperor at the conclusion of the tale. "Yet, while there appears no doubt of M. Landre's guilt, I would apply another test to wring his dastard soul. He believes you dead. Well then, we shall see what dismay will seize him when confronted with a vision from the grave."

He walked to the western wall of the cabinet and drew aside the tapestry, disclosing a small door which he threw open.

"This is an entrance of which I sometimes avail myself, M. Claude," he said. "Remain in the corridor. M. Landre is close at hand; I will send for him, and when he leaves me I shall request him to retire by this door."

M. Landre soon made his appearance in response to the imperial summons. He was a tall, dark man of elegant carriage, but sinister cast of countenance, and a certain amount of nervous anxiety was perceptible in his manner as he bowed low and seated himself at the emperor's command. After a few moments of conversation Napoleon signified that the audience was at an end, and M. Landre arose to go.

"You will leave by this door," said the emperor carelessly, lifting the tapestry which overhung the western wall.

M. Landre bowed again and opening the door stepped into the gloom of the corridor.

Scarcely had he taken one step forward when his eyes fell upon a shadowy form facing him with outstretched hand pointing menacingly. The features of the phantom were those of a murdered man, and uttering a cry of horror he sprang back into the cabinet, falling in a swoon at the emperor's feet. When he recovered his senses he found himself lying on a sofa, while Napoleon, seated at the table, was eying him with a sardonic smile.

"I trust you are better, M. Landre," said the emperor. "Your nerves must be badly unstrung. What was that lurking in yonder corridor to occasion your alarm? I looked, but saw nothing save darkness."

"It was—" began M. Landre, and then stopped short. "Your majesty will pardon my weakness," he said confusedly, "but indeed I am hardly master of myself. I have not been feeling well of late."

"You need rest, M. Landre," said the emperor smoothly; "rest undisturbed by dreams of political intrigue and plots, domestic and foreign. Your energy and ambition form too heavy a burden for you. Go home, M. Landre, and sleep—if you can."

A hint of something ominous in his imperial master's remarks grated unpleasantly on M. Landre's nerves, and in obedience to a motion of the emperor's hand he left the cabinet hastily by the door at which he had entered.

Scarcely had the sound of his footsteps died away when Napoleon summoned his chief of police from his hiding place.

"There remains but the punishment of the traitor, M. Claude," said the emperor. "His guilt is sufficiently established."

The chief glanced keenly at his imperial master's countenance, which bore a look of intense gloom and anxiety.

"If I am not mistaken, sire," he said, "the arrest of M. Landre in connection with his traitorous conduct would undoubtedly expose a condition of affairs which must cause much uneasiness among the French and abroad."

"It is so," assented the emperor wearily; "but how can such an exposure be averted?"

"By letting him decide his own fate, sire," responded the chief. "M. Landre's position is that of a man between two fires. He cannot leave Paris, for he is watched by my men day and night. Even if he could fly he would not obtain a welcome in Prussia. A renegade spy is useful to his employers only as long as he is undetected by those he deceives. Remains then for him either the scaffold, as a penalty for a traitor to his sovereign and country, or the gallies for complicity in the murders wrought by the Society of Avengers. Confronted with these specters of ruin and disgraceful death, it is probable that he would prefer to solve the problem with his own hand. If your majesty wills it so, I myself will lay the proofs before him."

"You say well, M. Claude," replied the emperor. "Go then, and conduct this affair to its ending, according to your own discretion."

An hour later M. Claude entered the magnificent mansion occupied by M. Landre at Autell, just without the gates of the city. In answer to the inquiry of the chief, the servant who admitted him stated that his master had not yet retired and was alone in the library.

M. Claude ascended the stairs and without knocking opened the door and stepped into the apartment. M. Landre, gazing upon the stern features of the man whom he imagined to have been done to death by his orders, uttered a scream of horror, and stood rigid where he had arisen from his chair. M. Claude's voice, cold and implacable, broke the silence.

"Traitor and assassin," he said in slow, measured accents. "It was no visitant from another world that struck terror to your craven heart to-night. M. Landre, your day of subterfuge and villainy has come to a close, and the darkness gathers fast around you. Your plots are laid bare and the hour of retribution has arrived. Behold the tokens!"

He thrust his hand into his breast and brought forth a bundle of papers which he placed upon the table.

"There lie the duplicates of your treasonable correspondence with Prussia," continued the chief, "and here is the token that marked the victims of your murderous hand."

A small arrow-shaped piece of scarlet metal rang sharply on the floor at M. Landre's feet.

"Ere the dawn rises in the east," spoke M. Claude solemnly, "the members of the Society of Avengers will be in the grasp of the law awaiting their doom. As for you, this house is surrounded by police, but there will be no attempt made to arrest you for half an hour. At the expiration of that time I will return for you—should you still be alive."

The perspiration trickled down M. Landre's forehead and he trembled violently, but no reply came from his quivering, pallid lips. M. Claude, producing a brace of loaded pistols, tossed one of them on the table.

"The alternative!" he said grimly, pointing to the weapon.

Then with his eyes still fixed upon M. Landre, he stepped into the corridor and closed the door behind him. The chief slowly descended the stairs, but ere he reached the middle landing a muffled report from the library rang through the air, followed by a heavy fall.

M. Claude ran hastily back to the room he had just left and threw open the door. Before the threshold lay the lifeless form of M. Landre, his head resting in a pool of scarlet

GASKET FALLS; BODY ROLLS OUT

GREWSOME ACCIDENT OCCURS AT BURIAL OF ITALIAN NEAR MT. WASHINGTON, O.

FUNERAL ENDS IN A RIOT

Mourners, Frenzied by Awful Sight, Imagine Corpse Was Dumped Purposely and Considerable Fighting Results.

Cincinnati.—The funeral of Gamaro Alileo, a young Italian, at the Fruit Hill cemetery, near Mt. Washington the other day, resulted in a riot and Clem Davis, who owns a general store at Fruit Hill, was forced to flee for his life and barricade the doors of his store to escape the fury of nearly 100 Italian laborers who sought his life.

Alileo was killed some days ago by Frank Cramer, a resident of Moscow, Cramer escaped, and feeling between the Americans and Italians has been very bitter since the shooting. The man died at the hospital, and after waiting some time to hear from Italy from the young man's parents it was decided to bury the body at Fruit Hill cemetery temporarily.

Almost every Italian in the vicinity attended the obsequies. The burial ritual had been read and the body was being lowered into the grave by the action of the cemetery and Davis had been called by the sexton to assist in the burial.

Just as they began to lower the body the strap which Davis was holding broke and the coffin went to the bottom of the grave with a crash. The whole side of the casket was broken out and the body rolled under the casket.

With a wild yell a dozen friends of the dead man simultaneously started after Davis. They accused him of being friendly to Cramer, who killed the man, and, seizing a number of clubs, they started after him. Davis, however, proved fleet of foot and outdistanced his pursuers. He ran into his store and barricaded the doors, while the late Italians tried in vain to gain an entrance.

They hurled clubs at the building and loudly yelled that if they did not kill him then they would at some future time. The entire settlement was aroused and many Americans gathered near the scene, but no one sought to quell the excited mob. After keeping Davis a prisoner in his store for several hours the Italians returned to the graveyard. They fixed up the broken coffin and replaced the corpse.

They fastened the lid of the box at the bottom of the grave and, seizing spades which were to have been used by the sexton and Davis, shovelled the dirt into the grave. The sexton fled while the Italians were chasing Davis.

Girl Elopes on Her Rollers. Asheville, N. C.—Miss Annie Lee, 17 years old, a pretty schoolgirl, daughter of Mrs. Robert E. Lee, escaped under the closest watch set by her parents and eloped with Charles M. Strouse, a popular young man, to Landrum, S. C., where they were married.

Miss Lee went to a skating rink several nights ago and was, as usual, accompanied by a member of her family.

After putting on her skates she skated from one end of the hall to the other and out of a rear door into the arms of her fiancé, who had a carriage waiting.

Sea Has Encroached on Land. A French scientist, M. Bertin, in dealing with the subject of coast erosion, mentions that the island of Jersey once formed part of the continent of Europe. He has also brought to light the interesting fact that there still exists an ancient charter by which a certain abbey was compelled to furnish the necessary plank for communicating with the island from the mainland at low water. The extent to which the sea has encroached on the land is evident from the fact that the journey from the mainland of France to the island by steamboat now takes an hour.

Dog's Carcase Wakes Her. Waterbury, Conn.—Maud Hinder, 12 years old, daughter of Edward Hinder, living near Greystown, arose in her sleep the other night and, donning scant attire, walked along the turnpike for a quarter of a mile. She would not have been missed had not a shepherd dog barked until the family was alarmed. Father and son met the girl, awakened by the dog's carcasses, running for home in a frightened state. Since then she has been hysterical.

Turns Over in Bed; Breaks Legs. Harrisburg, Pa.—Miss Margaret Kramer of Philadelphia fractured both legs while turning over in bed. Miss Kramer was the guest of her brother, Dr. Charles F. Kramer, a prominent druggist, for some time, and had been suffering from rheumatism.

AGAIN DECLINED WITH THANKS.

Would-Be Contributor "Up Against" the Misanthropic Editor.

The editor looked up as the caller came forward, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Sir," said the latter, "you objected to the meter of the spring poem I submitted to you the other day. Because of this I have for the present dropped poetry and turned my attention to the art of the essayist. Here, sir, is a paper on 'Woman and Her Defects,' which I trust you will find to your liking."

The editor stared hard at the title of the essay.

"Woman and Her Defects," he repeated. "Are you a married man, sir?"

"No," replied the caller, "I am not married."

The editor laughed harshly. "You should choose subjects," he said, "with which you have had an opportunity to become familiar." And he handed back the essay on "Woman and Her Defects."
